In honor of Black History month, here is a brief account of the accomplishments of another African-American innovator. Alice Augusta Ball (July 24, 1892 – December 31, 1916) was an African American chemist who developed an injectable oil extract that was the most effective treatment for leprosy until the 1940s. She was the first woman and first African American to receive a master's degree from the University of Hawaii , she was also the first woman chemistry professor at the university . In March 2016, Hawai'i Magazine ranked Ball in a list of the most influential women in Hawaiian history.
